This is a timely well-written manuscript that discusses the prominent issue of precision medicine. The author did an outstanding job in summarizing the current approaches, the challenges, and the opportunities of providing a value-driven concept of precision medicine. Although the author focused on health sustainability in New Zealand, his approach could easily be adopted in other parts of the world.

The manuscript is easy to follow with logical conclusions and appropriately stated facts and adequate up to date references. The abstract is concise and informative. The figure provided, although informative, is so complex to follow. I am not sure how to make it any easier though.

In summary this is an excellent manuscript that is worthy of publication.
