

Review of: "How Do Academicians Publish More Research Papers for Their Promotion and Positions? A Scrutiny of CV"

Beniamino Cappelletti-Montano¹

¹ University of Cagliari

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article addresses a very current issue in academia and higher education policy, namely the tendency on the part of researchers to inflate their CVs and fictitiously increase the number of publications.

The author refers to the Indian Higher Education System, however a similar trend seems to be taking place in many other Countries.

The article lacks in quantitatively proving its thesis. The author says that he examined several CVs, but he did not put the results of his analyses. In this way, the article seems more like the author's statement of his (agreeable) opinions than a critical analysis starting from the data.