The study topic is very interesting and important from both sociolegal and economical point of view. In the introductory part, the author presented the topic and its justification and rational behind it in very good way. Later on the Autor, had good description of the selected study location and some theoretical or assumed parameters that might be related to safety of night life in India. Later on, the author describe the working modes, hours and pattern and assumed its relation with 5 safety parameters such as active surveillance, social inclusion, diverse activities , permeability & visibility, and Territoriality. The relation between the selected safety parameters and safety record or incident in each area were not established neither examined. This required some statistical information analysis on incidents/ accidents in each area and try to conclude the relation. At the end, the author jumped into conclusion and recommendation without any support evidence or analysis done on the case and the study subject.

This paper or article need to be competed and supported with more analysis and conclusions to reinforce its claims, conclusion and recommendation even though some of the statement seems logical and rational following the commonsense, but to be acted scientifically, all claims need to be supported with facts and logical relations and conclusions.
