

Review of: "Implementation of e-learning during COVID-19"

Chris Prokes¹

¹ Sinclair Community College

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

All in all this is a decent paper though it certainly has some areas to improve. I found myself wondering if more prominent sources could have been used to justify some of the key points in the literature review. Though the points made are certainly salient, and the sources are culturally expected, there were thousands of papers written about this topic that could be used in each of the key bullets (especially) early on in the paper.

One larger qualm is that online learning and eLearning are not the same thing. There are many tenets or branches of elearning with online being only one of these sectors.

Another is that the manuscript mentions this is a qualitative paper yet the entire method is quantitative.

What other implications could you identify from a practice perspective?