

Review of: "How Well Are We Protecting Human Research Subjects?"

Samir El Hajjaji¹

¹ School of Science & Engineering, Al Akhawayn University, Morocco

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Interesting commentary. The subject of Human Research Subjects Protection is well covered. A good and well-referenced introduction with background history into the subject is given, with a particular focus on how it applies specifically in the United States. Though that introduction is great, in my view, most of this commentary is only an introduction. The suggestion made by the authors to use metrics for human research subject protections performance is interesting. However, since that discussion on metrics is already published (Tsan MF, Puglisi JT. Protecting human subjects participating in research. Am J Transl Res. 2023; 15(9): 5707-5714. www.ajtr.org/ISSN:1943-8141/AJTR0151875), then I do not see exceptional value in this commentary.