Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

1. The abstract needs to be concise and descriptive, and it ought to steer clear of specifying any explanatory variables.
2. The introduction is also very lengthy. Your introduction should be written in the order of background, problem, gap importance, and aim. The first four paragraphs ought to convey the same sort of image. If you are going to incorporate a literature review, then you should avoid including an excessive amount of detail and citation in the introduction.
3. In addition, the literature review is divided in such a way that it describes research gaps, methodologies, problems, and novelties, among other things.
4. The theoretical background should be included in the literature part.
5. It is better to use the ARDL method instead of regression analysis.
