

Review of: "SAM: A Language for Education"

Dian Sari Utami¹

¹ Universitas Islam Indonesia

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Dear Author,

The article about SAM: A Language of Education is very interesting and gives a new perspective. All texts are open to diverse interpretations. You mention that while theory does not grant credible access to meaning without authorial interpretation, it enables explanation. I agree that you mentioned experts use academic language among themselves, but when communicating with the public, they use accessible and understandable language. Of course, this will become the ideal language representation in the 'real world'. Overall, these concepts provide insights into the dynamic nature of knowledge, culture, and social interaction.

I strongly recommend this article be published with minor proofreading or revision.

Thank you very much.