

Review of: "Customary Land Tenure, Mining, and the Development Question: Insights From a Transitional State"

Jhon Jairo Mosquera Rodas¹

¹ Universidad Cooperativa de Colombia

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Although the research presented a panoramic analysis of the subject, it is important to include the care of natural resources as an essential element for the development of a study of this nature. The conflict over land tenure, although fundamental, is not enough to frame the problem in its real dimension, which is also that of the conservation of natural resources as an essential element for the sustainability of a mining economy in any part of the world.

At the methodological level, the research requires more clarity on the methodology being used, as it is not very clear whether it is a research that uses a bibliographic, analytical, or hermeneutic methodology. With regard to the presentation of the data, it is important that these are presented in tables, even if this is a qualitative research, as is evident in the section on methodology.

Kind regards,