I found the article interesting and timely as we are still seeking current information on the issues surrounding graduate employability. With the rapid changing work landscape due to the advancement of technology, IoT and gig industries, the focus of interests brought up by the article is refreshing. Much could be learnt from the sharing of the research findings.

My comments as follow;

1. Abstract is an important part of any article. There is a need to ensure relevant info is provided in the abstract (problem addressed, underpinning theories, methodology, findings & implications)
2. Some discussions on relevant theories/past studies would encourage deeper understanding of the direction of the paper.
3. A discussion on the research methodology could further assist readers on the data collection and analysis.
4. Some data presented but may need further discussions and elaborations to establish their reliability and validity; strengthening the interpretations/claims made. The discussions for this may need proper organization under 'Findings'.
