This is a case report showing aggressive triple negative breast cancer manifesting as skin metastasis. Missed or wrong diagnosis can lead to further spread of the disease. Most importantly, the PET scan, which is the most common investigation done to rule out metastasis, usually misses such kind of cutaneous manifestation. Therefore, a biopsy is the only confirmatory test to be done on the affected skin. This article shall increase awareness of all oncologists to take a biopsy without delay.

The article is well-written and informative. Can be accepted.
