

Review of: "Participatory budgeting for public involvement in environmental sustainability at a Thai university"

Tsebo Kgoto Matsekoleng

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This paper presents a case study of participatory democracy at a Thai university in the form of participatory budgeting. Such studies are required in our societies in order to raise environmental awareness and reduce environmental issues. The paper's dimensions are thoroughly discussed. However, I recommend that the author create a table and present a proposed project along with their reasons for proposing such projects, what factors influenced their proposed projects? I further propose a new section for study recommendations based on the author's limitations and findings.