

Review of: "Empowering Future Workforces: Reframing Education to Develop Essential Skills for a Dynamic Labor Market"

Guy Major Ngayo Fotso¹

¹ Toulouse Business School

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article touches a very important and relevant point of education programs adapted for our current fast changing environment.

However it is not clear what topic the author wants to focus on: inequality in education or suggesting new competencies to develop and with what training methods?

Furthermore, the scientific methodology used for this article is not explained. The article looks like an editorial or a point of view. If this is the purpose, it is fine. Otherwise, there is a need to have a more methodological approach for this paper.

The contribution to research, the theoretical approach and the practical applications are not very clear.