

Review of: "The Political Ecologies of the Tonle Sap: Global, Regional and National Framework for Conservation and Development"

Nikola Glamuzina

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

It is obvious that the author has significant knowledge regarding the issue and the very topic. In my opinion, the article is weak in the Methodology chapter because there are no specific methods. On the other hand, it is necessary to connect the Results And Discussion chapter with the outcome of the research based on the specific methods. Just one suggestion: since the author is familiar with the issue and has experience from the personal ground work why not try the stakeholder analysis (SA) and present the article in another way? The results of such a research would definitely be valuable to all the researchers who deal with the problems of nature protection and conservation.