The author needs to maintain formal language use throughout the article. For instance, the word 'via' in the title of the article needs to be replaced with 'through'. The article needs to be re-worked as follows:

1. It must be written in the present tense as much as possible as it discusses factual information about the study.
2. It must explicitly indicate what the purpose of the study was.
3. It must indicate methods used to conduct the study, how data for the study was collected and how it was interpreted and analyzed.
4. It must also explicitly indicate what the findings of the study were and what recommendations the author wants to make.

The methods section needs to be developed to indicate how data was collected, how desk-top research was conducted.

The article needs to be taken for editing and proofreading before it is ready for publication.
