Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

1. The graphs exhibit a meticulous attention to detail and showcase independent thought. However, the paper's framework does not conform to established academic patterns.
2. The author recurrently references the viewpoints of Keynes, the Bank of England, and Hyman Minsky. While these citations effectively convey the author's sentiments, they are fragmented, diminishing the paper's formal scholarly character.
3. Although the author claims to engage in theory deconstruction and reconstruction, locating this aspect within the paper proves perplexing. A dedicated section titled "Theoretical Analysis" could alleviate this confusion.
4. In summation, this endeavor displays commendable efforts, brimming with insightful ideas. I encourage the author to delve into more academic literature, thereby refining future works.
