The review article lacked organisation and was riddled with technical, grammatical, and spelling problems. Similarly, in the opening part, the authors might present enough explanation for the research piece. This calls into question the manuscript's academic value. The authors must prepare their paper according to the author instruction handbook.

In the opening part, the authors should include more relevant material.

The methodology (search engine tool and key words for the review paper) should be provided by the authors.

The conclusion should be revised by the writers. The conclusion should provide a summary of the findings as well as the next steps.

The authors should check the references for uniformity and adhere to the format in author instruction guide and update
