

Review of: "Glycemic Control and Its Determinants Among Type 2 Diabetes Mellitus Patients at the Limbe Regional Hospital, Limbe, Southwestern Cameroon"

Jing Sun¹

¹ Beijing Medical University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The content of this article is the blood glucose control of diabetic patients and its related factors, and the topic has certain clinical value.

Introduction

The basic concepts of diabetes and blood glucose control described by the author in this section are recommended to be deleted. The criteria for diabetes diagnosis and blood glucose control related to this study should be added. It is suggested to supplement the factors related to blood glucose control and the current research status. It is suggested to supplement the purpose and significance of this study.

Methods

It is suggested to supplement the basic research methods such as sample size calculation and sampling method. Please fill in the details of the information collection process.

Results

Please complete the content below the BMI heading on page 7.

Discussion

please supplement the references in the citation section. In-depth analysis of the significance of the results of this study and how they compare with other results. The similarities and differences between statistically significant and non-statistically significant results and their mechanisms should be analyzed.