

Review of: "Low Donor Site Morbidity Supports the Use of Infraumbilical Flaps for Head and Neck Reconstruction: A Retrospective Cohort Study"

Shanthosh Kanna¹

¹ King George's Medical University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Article is written systematically well with careful choice of language and is certainly a must read one to be in touch with recent advances in field of head and neck reconstruction. However, considering completeness, author could have mentioned about the recipient site locations and more about the requirements of which flap to be used in which type of defects and postoperative recipient site photographs to get more knowledge/ idea to encourage to use these flaps in readers practice.