

Review of: "Morphomechanics: An Updated View"

R. A. Sukhodolskaya

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article under review is of undoubted interest. I agreed to review because I myself am involved in morphometric research and have often encountered the phenomena of "self-organization" of individuals under certain environmental conditions. The only thing that raises doubts is the fact that the author actually presents a review of works on morphomechanics. I would like an analysis of truly experimental works that confirm (or do not confirm) the author's fabrications. In any case, the article is worthy of publication, since it outlines the path of new approaches to explaining the phenomena of organism development outside of established traditional views.