

Review of: "Sero-prevalence of Viral Hepatitis B and C infection and associated factors among Pregnant Women in Southeast Ethiopia: Community-based crossectional study"

Majda Bouraddane¹

¹ Université Cadi Ayyad

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Good evening, Thank you first of all for choosing me to review this article. I give a favorable opinion for the publication of this article in your newspaper, with very few comments. I would like to congratulate Mr. Mohammed de Goba for his very structured and rich work. My remarks are, the introduction part is very long with 15 references, it is a lot, it must be reduced and start talking about pregnant women and hepatitis from the beginning. the statistical study is very well established, all factors have been taken into consideration. the discussion is also very hive all the parameters have been well discussed with recent references. in the conclusion part, we do not put a reference, we must remove the reference. and I noticed the absence of the ethical code in your work, you just put authorization and consent. your work requires a code of ethics. well done once again and good luck for the future