This paper addresses a very relevant topic; however, for it to be a significant contribution, it should be revised and improved methodologically. First of all, it should be structured with a more standard index (introduction, method, results, discussion/conclusions). In the method section, several details should be provided (following PRISMA orientation), specifically about the exclusion criteria that were applied to these 111 primary studies, so that only three were finally included. Was a quality assessment applied? And if so, how? I strongly encourage the author to re-elaborate this review to really make it systematic and complete.
