

Review of: "Factors contributing to labour unrest at the garment factories in Bangladesh: A cross-sectional study"

Gayatree Sahoo¹

¹ Ravenshaw University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This work "Factors Contributing to Labour Unrest at the Garment Factories in Bangladesh: A Cross-Sectional Study" is a good work. the structure of the paper is good and well written. The authors have attempted to find the vital factors beneath labour unrest garment sector of Bangladesh. I have some observations.

1. Regarding their sample selection criteria, what is the total population i.e. the total number of labourers in garment sector from which sample has been taken?
2. some more details about the regression results table needed.
3. In this empirical work, the researchers have found that in some sample regions, labour unrest is more. Did the researchers try to find any reasons for such results?

Addressing the above points may improve the quality of the paper. However, this is a nice attempt by all the authors involved in this study. Publication of the paper will add valuable insights into the existing literature on labour unrest.