This article does not have clear enough significance and the purpose of writing, so it tends to be complicated. I found several topics in this article: 1. The author can direct his writing to examine the potential of Pela Gandong in managing conflict and fostering togetherness. Writers can start their writing by examining social disputes that arise in society, providing data on the number and causes of matches. Build a literature review on culture and conflict. Explain your views in the literature review and write a discussion about Pela Gandong's values in conformity with the culture that can reduce friction. Provide empirical data about it. 2. The author can direct his writing to seek Christian values in Pela Gandong as an effort to present Pela Gandong culture in modern Christian society. The author can start his essay with a debate about whether or not traditional culture conflicts with religion (Christianity). Do a simple literature review about it. In the discussion section, you can examine the values in Pela Gandong that align with Christian values. You can build your argument by comparing the contents of the Bible with the values and practices of Pela Gandong in society. In conclusion, you can claim that Pela Gandong must be maintained in culture because it does not conflict with Christian values and even contributes positively to the development of community quality. This article also lacks clarity on methods. The author should better explain the research method used. if using interviews, explain the significance of interviews for research. Who was interviewed, what was their position in society, how many people were interviewed, and was this sample sufficient? I cannot comment on the conclusion because the direction of this article was not very clear from the beginning.
