Vitalii Shymko

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

A wonderful, vivid and profound reflection on one of the most difficult problems in cognition per se. In just a few pages, the author managed to delve deeply into the problem of a two-dimensionalist and structuralist approach to intuitionist linguistics. Among other things, the author's discourse develops the finest facets of the problem of the negativity of language (Saussure, Lacan, et.al.). The text is perfectly readable, despite the high level of cognitive complexity of the material. Is the article worthy of publication? Certainly. Refined culture and impeccable discipline of thinking, as well as creative impulse provide an unconditional heuristic potential of the article.
