This is a good summary article of how some outlets portray the issue. It is good to see a regional (East African) perspective conveyed alongside the BBC, etc. The piece is rather descriptive and could be enhanced with a more analytical approach. The use of 'African migrants' as a keyword reflects the way in which the media represents Africans; however, this could be unpacked. For example, we do not see references to Ukrainian refugees as 'European,' so why do we tolerate such a homogenising term? Good work on collating a range of data.
