The article is interesting but English and punctuation should be revised. Abbreviations should be reported in full the first time (in the conclusion section, MUP stands for ...?). Even if franchise, Erasmus or staff were not present in Spain, it should have been included in the study, since Spanish students tend to practice "botellon". A recent study (doi: 10.3390/healthcare10020393) has demonstrated that Spaniards, especially Spanish females, tend to consume a lot of alcoholic beverages, especially on Saturday night when students often go out and organize "botellon" before of their planned event.

Additionally, why the AUDIT questionnaire has not been administered to evaluate the prevalence of risky drinkers? It could provide an interesting data together with the other outcomes.
