

Review of: "Assessment of soil erosion in the Cesar watershed, an initial step toward the restoration of the Cesar River"

Mariana I. Zilio¹

¹ Universidad Nacional del Sur

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I found the manuscript really interesting. The methodology is clear, and the conclusions are correctly derived from the performed analysis. The article is also well-written, and it is short and concise, a specially valuable characteristic when the audience can eventually be wide and diverse.

In suggestion mode, I think the author could add a little paragraph about the potential impact of soil erosion on the socio-ecological system of the Cesar watershed in order to highlight the relevance of including this kind of studies in the decision-making process related to basin management. In spite of this, my recommendation is for publication.