

Review of: "The Role of Women's Business Performance in Promoting Sustainable Development"

Raza Ali Tunio¹

¹ Sichuan University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The research objectives are well-defined and align with the study's purpose. The use of a quantitative research approach with an explanatory research design is suitable for examining the factors affecting Micro and Small-Scale Enterprises in the given context. The results regarding the factors affecting women's business performance are presented clearly, and it's positive to see that customer satisfaction, access to finance, marketing skill, information technology, and access to entrepreneurship training were identified as having positive and statistically significant effects. These findings align with existing literature. In conclusion, the paper addresses an important research topic and provides valuable insights into the factors affecting women's business performance in the context of sustainable development. With some minor revisions and additions, it has the potential to make a meaningful contribution to the field.

Overall, this research paper is well-structured and offers important insights. Addressing the above points will further strengthen the quality and impact of the study.