The topic is very interesting and still relevant today.

The authors have followed the IMRAD structure in presenting the article.

I think the introduction was too long, and it would be better to shorten it while respecting the funnel argument.

All abbreviations should be spelled out the first time they appear.

Have you checked the distribution of the quantitative variables? Because you need to check that you're using the appropriate statistical tests.

Have you checked the possibility of using validated versions of the scores in Arab populations?
