Very interesting and well presented article. Study participants cite the consequences of the pandemic on their emotional well-being, stress, responsibilities and the lack of time needed to complete their jobs. They point to management issues such as the lack of consistent and systematic guidance leading to frequent changes in infection prevention protocols. Note a bias, without consequence on the sincerity of the article: the percentages of the responses presented are calculated according to the total number of participants who provided an answer to the individual question, and not the total number of participants in the discussion group.
