

Review of: "The Effect of Early Bilateral Sequential Phacovitrectomy for Terson's Syndrome on Neurorehabilitation"

Qin Chen

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This is an interesting case. Under special circumstances, it is possible to perform bilateral sequential surgery and achieve good therapeutic effects. I have two questions

1. There is no presentation of objective examination results in the article, such as preoperative B-scan ultrasonography, postoperative fundus photography or OCT results.
2. There is a lack of objective scoring and comparison in the evaluation of patients' neurological function before and after surgery.