You

Kindly, can you edit this review of an article? I need to be polite but assertive. Dear Author, I believe the chosen topic is extremely interesting and timely. Academicians are actively debating the importance of critical thinking in higher education and research. I would like to suggest a revision of the article to better highlight the point the author aims to make. What is the value addition of this article? If it is a literature review on the topic, I believe you should go deeper in a review of the theoretical and empirical studies available on this topic. It would also be useful to have an empirical contribution, especially if this comes from sub-Saharan countries. Has anyone tried to apply the principles of critical research thinking to research in the context of Sub-Saharan Africa? As it is, the article, in my view, does not offer an original or unique point.

Dear Author,

I wish to express my appreciation for the topic you've chosen, which I find both interesting and timely. The discourse surrounding the importance of critical thinking in higher education and research is one of considerable relevance in academic circles.

In offering feedback, I would like to suggest a revision of the article to more clearly articulate the central thesis or key argument you aim to convey. It would greatly enhance the article's impact to clearly delineate the unique value it adds to the existing literature. If it is intended as a literature review, I encourage you to delve deeper into both theoretical frameworks and empirical studies pertinent to the topic.

Furthermore, I believe there is an opportunity for the article to make a substantive empirical contribution, particularly from the perspective of Sub-Saharan countries. Exploring whether the principles of critical research thinking have been applied in the context of research within Sub-Saharan Africa could significantly enrich the discourse.

At present, while the article is informative, it appears to lack a distinctive or original perspective. I offer these suggestions in the spirit of constructive critique, aiming to assist in further refining your work.

Warm regards,

Mauro
