This is a very interesting and innovative paper, but a few pieces of information need to be added.

Please review the English throughout the paper.

Please change the results section of the abstract. Substitute "however" for "in addition" or "furthermore."

Please explain your results better. Did you record the vital signs of the patient, such as blood pressure or heart rate, before and after laser application? Did you record blood exams? These are very important pieces of information!

When I read the paragraph below, I thought the patient of the case report had had cancer. Was that the case? If not, I don't see the need for adding this information. It is out of context, unless you explain that even though the patient in question did not have cancer, this information needs to be addressed.

"It should be noted that when we apply photobiomodulation for several minutes to oncological patients or those with a previous history of oncological pathologies, the application time must be reduced as much as possible. The literature shows that a systemic effect can occur on the patient through this therapy due to the shutdown of nitrous oxide in the blood circulation, which increases blood supply to tissues and can worsen the cancerous manifestation in organs compromised by this pathology."
