

Review of: "Procurement Planning & the Rwanda Biomedical Centre (RBC)"

Alexsandro Silva Solon

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article is overall well written and sufficiently updated. The focus on biomedical activities and interventions is not evident. Furthermore, it would be useful to provide some examples - for example of tools, technologies or procedures - in which procurement planning should be well addressed. The very concept of costs-benefits is better concretized with the exposition of specific topics and problems, even if briefly. The research gap has not been rigorously argued. The research question has been published in many studies.