

Review of: "How E-School Counseling Has Supported Learners Facing Pandemic Challenges: Results and Perspectives for Counseling Professionals"

Dennis G. Caballes

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The paper is unique and very helpful especially that online learning is still one of the modalities being used at present. E-guidance interventions may have both advantages and disadvantages but a plausible alternative from the typical means of delivering services to students at risk. There was an extensive review of literature. I commend the authors for coming up with a well delineated discussion making the thoughts they wish to convey to the readers very clearly stipulated. The methodology is rigorous however, it is best to present statistical results in tabular form to show granular details of the salient findings leading to the decision of hypotheses indicated in the study. Nevertheless, it is reader friendly. I agree that this is a good way to compel guidance professionals to raise the bar in enhancing their professional practices in any crisis contexts.