I reviewed the manuscript entitled "Political Economy and Ecology of International Regional Development: Indonesia Urban and Rural Development Loans from the Asian Development Bank (ADB)" and my comments are as follows:

The authors consider the previous theories and studies to be faulty. In my opinion, this kind of criticism is not professional. Authors can criticize the previous studies but can not explicitly reject them. On the other hand, the authors used the results of other studies although they knew they were faulty or invalid.

Many grammatical errors exist in the text.

In the methodology section, a clearer description of the used method is required.

The discussion section needs to expand.

Conclusion section is very short. What are the limitations of study? What are exact policy implications of this study? What are the suggestions of authors for future studies?
