General comment

1. In introduction section, its better if you write numbers in figure because it's difficult for the audience to read and comprehend long numbers in letter.
2. Although, Buruli disease has no prevention or treatment, assessing the magnitude may have importance in guiding response, thus you can justify the rational of the research.

Method

1. Please describe the specific date of data collection
2. If the study population of this study was residents with nodules, plaques, or any lesions, and confirmed Buruli ulcer patients, as stated in your study population section, this should be explicitly informed in the title. This have overestimated the prevalence of the disease in the area
3. The sample size determination and sampling technique is not clear, it is better if you made it more understandable by the reader.
4. Write the diagnosis and case ascertainment clearly by citing the available literature, also make distinction weather you classified case clinically or after laboratory confirmation?

Discussion

1. On the discussion section you discussed similarity of symptom of Buruli case between in your study and others. But it's better to discuss the magnitude in your finding with the finding of similar research's and other national and international report.

Conclusion

1. On the conclusion section your research article has to shows the implication of the result for the local and international response on Buruli disease
