The article is well presented, with a few areas to revise:

1. The abstract includes too much about the research design and too little about the findings and even future work
2. More updated references (perhaps indicating when the original article/study was written/conducted).
3. Declare when the study was conducted.
4. Visualise the results from the quantitative parts of the study.
5. The novelty of the findings is low, which could be part of the discussion. The findings also seem general, indicating an overall analysis or discussion during the study.
