

Review of: "Public Health Student Internship: An Opportunity to Explore System, Self, and Society"

Ritika Tiwari<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> University of Greenwich

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

In India, the demand for skilled public health professionals is increasing across various sectors in India. On one hand where there is a need for individuals with expertise in areas such as epidemiology, biostatistics, health education, environmental health, and healthcare administration; there is also a need for ensuring that students get hands-on training as well within these areas. Thus, there is a need for public health students to also have an exposure of working in communities. In such instances, internship opportunities for working within community is much needed.

This article is thus crucial for documenting the importance of public health internships and their role in shaping the next generation of public health professionals. The students have also stated that this opportunity was a great platform for learning, skill development, networking, and personal growth, while also contributing to the advancement of public health initiatives and interventions.