The article is fair and sheds light on online group working, which is becoming essential in students' training considering the last COVID-19 experience. However, there are minor shortcomings with the article. Many sentences were not referenced, especially in the introduction section. The sample size is small, and using only female participants punctures the conclusion on online group work in training students. Overall, the article is good enough for publication if the author can make minor corrections as suggested here and by other reviewers.
