

Review of: "A Value-Driven Future Approach to Precision Medicine for Health Sustainability in New Zealand: A Perspective"

Alpa Sidhu¹

¹ University of Iowa

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The manuscript is well-written and flows very well for the reader. It outlines with examples present landscape of precision medicine, population studies, and also includes the genetic diagnostic options with digital and tele-healthcare modalities. The publication has global impact as these exist worldwide.

My suggestion would be to write the human genes in italics and to simplify the table. I think the table is thorough and has very valuable information, it would be more impactful if it is made easier to follow for the reader.