

Review of: "Dignifying Lifelong Learning: The Case of Internships"

Temesgen Oljira Geleta<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Ambo University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article's title is quite striking as it rethinks the internship's essence by linking it with lifelong learning. The objectives are well-defined and easy to grasp. For lifelong learning to be impactful and continuous, acknowledging interns' capacities and needs is crucial. This article delves into how the internship is intertwined with lifelong learning and how it contributes to dignifying the learning experience. It would gain more depth and credibility if each segment were supported by references. While the concept and article are inclusive and pertinent to modern internship and lifelong learning approaches, it would benefit from more scholarly support. Scholarly articles are crucial to back up how equity in treatment, access, and regulation can improve internships. They also shed light on how equity, access, and regulation can elevate the experiences of interns and employers in lifelong learning. Adding citations that bolster the arguments presented would enhance its impact. Furthermore, there's room for a more detailed exploration of how lifelong learning and internship intersect. In general, the article is relevant in the lifelong learning field."