

Review of: "[Research Note] Dengue – Therapeutic Efforts in Mexico"

Miguel Moreno-Garcia

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

In this research, the authors provide a brief summary of a few papers related to the investigation of possible drug candidates for the treatment of dengue. The idea is, however, not well processed. It is essential to understand the great variation in the symptomatology of patients. There is a variation in symptoms and magnitude of symptoms in cases of non-severe dengue, while it is lower in cases of dengue with alarm signs and severe dengue. I believe a review that considers the three types of dengue, the variation within them, and above all, trying to explain under what conditions or how the drugs would be used, would be very helpful.