

Review of: "Sacred Plants and Their Miraculous or Healing Properties"

Yaqueline A. Gheno-Heredia

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

In general terms, the article Sacred Plants and their Miraculous or Healing Properties, is a very complete compilation of referenced information about the medicinal plants mentioned there.

The way of presenting the information is acceptable, clear, and in a logical order. It addresses the information for each species from the general, historical, and botanical, to the part where the toxic and psychotropic effects and the chemical substances involved in these actions are mentioned.

Something that is very notable is the ethnobiological approach that this article provides, exposing the historical part, rituals, and worldviews using the history of the ritual and sacred species that are interwoven at a global level.

References and bibliographic citations are sufficient to support the work.

Although the images and photographs are sufficient, it is recommended to include a couple more images per species presented, which make greater and better reference to what is mentioned in the text, including those that provide knowledge of sacred plants with a little more detail. . ritual.

I appreciate the opportunity to read and review this manuscript.

My opinion is that it can be published with minor adjustments.