Before accepting it for publication, I strongly advised adding the following points after reading the article (which was offered as a hypothesis).

There are grammatical errors that the authors need to improve in the article. Add the abstract, the introduction, and the hypothesis (separate heading). Following are the inclusion and exclusion criteria, data collection, physical examination, and clinical examinations that you will use to test your hypothesis. A hypothetical model is necessary to comprehend the idea more quickly.

The following questions should each have a separate heading with the required response:

What information do we already have on the topic?

What new information does your suggested theory bring, and what advantages does it have?
