Fowlpox Virus Vaccine

National Cancer Institute

Source

A recombinant virus-based vaccine that contains various peptide antigens. Fowlpox virus is an attractive vector because its genome is easy to manipulate and it does not multiply in human tissues. Strong CD8 T cell responses may be induced after prolonged immunization and have been associated with tumor regression.