This paper, authored by Dr. Khalid Hussain Mir and Rafique Anjum, embarks on a scholarly expedition to dissect the complexities of the Neo-Sufi paradigm, an innovative concept attributed to Dr. Fazlur Rahman, a distinguished scholar in Islamic studies. It aims to scrutinize Dr. Rahman's theoretical frameworks, philosophical bases, and methodological approaches to Sufism, especially its evolution and relevance in the modern era. Employing an interdisciplinary approach that weaves together Islamic philosophy, theology, and mysticism, the research seeks to highlight how the Neo-Sufi paradigm bridges traditional Sufi thought with contemporary issues, promoting spiritual growth, ethical living, and social harmony. The paper critically assesses Dr. Rahman's efforts to align Sufi philosophy with modern intellectual trends, exploring its implications for interfaith dialogue, pluralism, and Islam's role in today's global discourse. Ultimately, the study provides a comprehensive exploration of Dr. Rahman's contributions, enhancing our understanding of Sufism's place within the modern Islamic narrative and its potential impact on policy, religious leadership, and scholarly debates on the confluence of tradition and modernity.
