I find the research's ultimate goal to be acceptable. If you could present some of the data in a figure or graph that readers could readily understand, I think the information would be much more useful. But before the publication, it would be even better if you could take care of the following problems.

1. In the results section, attempt to provide a few figures.
2. Try to keep your abstract brief while including a wealth of information, and include some intriguing statistics there as well.
3. In the topic "Theory of Planned Behaviour (TPB)" and in a second paragraph, needs to be corrected; I would suggest review all the line and update again then this could be publishable.

Note: I am looking for a next version!
