

Review of: "Participatory budgeting for public involvement in environmental sustainability at a Thai university"

Willone Lim¹

¹ Swinburne University of Technology, Sarawak Campus

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This article covers on a very interesting and important topic. It is certainly important to include understanding on the active role of university students in environmental sustainability projects and how the University as whole getting involved in participatory budgeting in region like Thailand in the growing body of literature. I believe that it would be helpful to clarify any doubts for the analytical process or method by including more details particularly on the analysis of qualitative responses. In my opinion the article can be strengthened by comparing findings of other similar studies and by clarifying the unique contribution of this study. Finally, I do believe that a well-constructed conclusion and future research work would boost the overall impact of this study.