The publication is interesting, and I agree with the previous comments.

It is recommended to mention in the introduction the number of butterflies cited for the country, state, and finally for the city; this can be a bibliographic review.

It is suggested to introduce the localities where this butterfly has been cited; in this way, the new locality is highlighted.

If you compile localities, you can perform a niche modeling analysis.

It would also be convenient to propose in a future discussion a broader study to define urban sites, preferably outside the university.
